Of those views came from Reels — the discovery format

73.6% of all views come from people who don't follow her yet. A collaboration with Evelyn isn't a post to an existing fanbase — it's a continuous introduction to millions of new viewers, delivered through storytelling the algorithm actively pushes to fresh audiences.

58,500 shares in a single week is the metric hotels should read twice: shares are personal recommendations. Her audience doesn't just watch — it forwards her videos to the exact friends and partners they travel with.

WHAT THIS MEANS TOGETHER

A combined audience of 2.1M+ followers and 17M+ views in the last 30 days across platforms — with TikTok accelerating fastest right now. Content produced during a hotel stay lands on two feeds simultaneously, each with its own discovery engine pushing it to non-followers.

Why This Works for a New York Hotel

I New York is her genuine story, not a campaign stop

Evelyn lived six months in New York and calls it her favorite city in the world, on record. Hotel content slots into an affection her audience already knows — it reads as a homecoming, not an ad.

II Her verticals are a hotel's verticals

Gastronomy, travel and quiet reflection — rooms, restaurants, rooftops and neighborhoods are the natural set of her content. She turns a property into a narrative arc: morning coffee, golden-hour streets, cinematic nights.

III A high-value inbound audience

Her audience is Brazilian — consistently one of New York City's largest and highest-spending international visitor markets. She travels as a couple, matching the date-night and romantic-getaway packages NYC hotels sell best.

IV Discovery reach, and assets you keep

With 73.6% of views from non-followers, a collaboration introduces the property to new travelers rather than re-showing it to fans. Reels, Stories, TikTok and stills can include usage rights for the hotel's own channels.
